With its rich natural landscape, stunning scenery and distinctive seasons, Sapporo would satisfy the explorer in any one of us. This capital of Hokkaidō, the most northern and second largest island of Japan, was established in 1868, its vast open wilderness backed by magnificent mountains appealed to the early settlers.

THE CITY

Prasit Rodphan/Shutterstock.com

It would be hard to lose yourself in modern Sapporo; an American style grid system operates, streets named and numbered according to the points of the compass. Odori Park -Sapporo's " Central Park", runs through the centre of the city dividing north from south. You will find that art is heavily integrated with this comparatively modern city.

The north houses the university and its student "hang-outs", as well as several traditional ryokan inns. To the south lies the shopping district with department stores and restaurants. "Susukino" is also in the south - this is where entertainment, locals and visitors alike congregate here to enjoy the variety of bars, restaurants and clubs. One of the last areas of Japan to be colonised, it previously had been the domain of the "Ainu"- an indigenous tribe with a distinct culture and history - one of which is now displayed in one of the city's museums.

DO & SEE

One of the last areas of Japan to be colonised, it previously had been the domain of the "Ainu"- an indigenous tribe with a distinct culture and history - one of which is now displayed in one of the city's museums. Nowadays, as well as its parks and forests, complete with wildlife, it is a colourful, progressive and energetic city that attracts the adventurous traveller.

The legacy of Sapporo's vivid past is perceivable as there are various historical buildings. Historic landmarks include the former Hokkaidō government office building, the Sapporo Clock Tower, the Hokkaidō Shrine and the Sapporo TV Tower. Having hosted the 1972 Winter Olympics and as venue for the Sapporo Snow Festival, the city is also famous for winter sports. However, food and arts lovers will enjoy themselves here as well. Sapporo Brewery and Shiroi Koibito Park or the Sapporo Symphony Orchestra and Sapporo Artpark are popular sights.

Botanical Gardens

Visit the botanical gardens on the outskirts of the city. There are plenty of pleasant walking trails and lawns, inviting you to take a break. The area includes a small Ainu museum, a greenhouse and an alpine garden.

SHOPPING

Elena Pavlovich/Shutterstock.com

Sapporo provides a great number of stores, offering everything from fashion boutiques with Western well-known brands to traditional cotton or silk kimonos. Not only the city offers a number of large underground malls such as the popular Tanuki Koji Shopping Arcade but also department stores including Parco with ten floors of shopping and don't forget the small local shops selling souvenirs. Other popular product in Hokkaido besides kimonos are wood carvings, produced often by the Ainu and are available in the boutiques of Sapporo as well as in museum and hotel gift shops.

Taxi

Taxis in Sapporo are safe and can be easily found around the city center and at the designated taxi waiting area such as airport and major hotels.

All taxi has a meter which clearly indicates the fare. If the taxi accepts credit cards this will be shown visibly on the window. Before stopping a taxi, you should know where you are going since the postal address system is complex so make sure clearly tell the address or have an address written down on a paper to show the driver.
