Before the age of airplane transportation and luxury cruises, a vacation to the otherwise unattainable Hawaiian Islands was the stuff of dreams—accessed by way of picture books, films, and wishful conversation. Now the world introduces itself to Hawaii again and again throughout the seasons, and no time is better than the present to visit its second largest island. Maui has been voted "Best Island" by Conde Nast Traveler for the last 19 years, and it consistently succeeds as the ultimate vacation destination.

THE ISLAND

DonLand/Shutterstock.com

In Hawaiian mythology, Māui was a demigod, cultural hero, and ancient chief who bore a significance that led to the entire island being named for him. According to the legends, Māui lifted the Hawaiian Islands from the depths of the sea and lassoed the sun over the island's highest peak, Haleakala. Such oral traditions and cultural norms were solidified in the 15th century under the rule of King Piilani, who was the first to unite the island under a singular "alii," or royal family.

Centuries following Piilani's reign, King Kamehameha I defeated Maui's last king, Kahekili, in 1790. The usurper engaged King Kahekili in a ferocious battle across the iconic Iao Valley, taking control of the island and making Lahaina the new capital of the Hawaiian Kingdom.

Lahaina would serve as the epicenter of Hawaii's government for the next five decades as the town would develop an immensely successful whaling industry. At the industry's height, as many as 500 ships would anchor at Lahaina's port between 1840 and 1865! Paralleling the whaling industry was Maui's sugar industry. Beginning with the first sugar mill in 1828, the industry would draw a diverse array of plantation workers from China, Japan, Puerto Rico, Korea, the Philippines, Portugal, and other European nations. Such a melting pot would lend to the bold, cultural multiplicity of today's Hawaii.

Experience Maui with its coasts, waterfalls, beaches, mountains, and rich heritage. The Valley Isle is a dream from which you never have to wake.
