Think “Napa” and your palate twinges with delight as images of endless vineyards and glasses of wine come to mind. Napa, California has been synonymous with such delicacies for quite some time—and with good reason. As County seat to one of the Great Wine Capitals (there are only nine in the world), Napa is proud to associate itself with some of the most experienced and enthusiastic wine aficionados on the planet. Do not be fooled, however: Napa is also home to fine attractions, such as Main Street’s “Restaurant Row,” the West End, the Oxbow District, historical districts, grand Victorian homes, acclaimed luxury hotels, and not to mention, beautiful weather and clean, clear air.

THE CITY

Brandon Bourdages/Shutterstock.com

Napa, California is one of the state's Golden Oldies; with a history extending back to 1847, it draws its beginnings from the California Gold Rush. Initially inhabited by Native Americans who lived harmoniously among the area's elk, deer, grizzly bears, and cougars for centuries, Napa was then explored by Europeans in 1823. Spanish priests led the expeditions and sought to proselytize the Native populations (some with success). Spanish presence would vacillate to American settlements soon thereafter, as farmers began to arrive in the 1830s.

Nathan Coombs founded the City of Napa in 1847 following the purchase of 80 acres of Rancho Entre Napa from Nicholas Higuera. The city's first business was a saloon, with the first general store being opened a year later. The California Gold Rush of the late 1850s led to Napa's expansion and considerable economic success, and the Valley's Great Silver Rush in 1858 also contributed to the city's burgeoning mining industry.

It should not be overlooked that, much like all of California's cities and towns, Napa itself was carved from the hardships and sweat of foreign-born laborers. Individuals from China's Canton province, Southern Europe's coastal provinces, Italy, and various other nations made the arduous trip overseas to meet the demand for workers in what were considered "dirty" jobs. Such investment led to the vibrant and modern city that Napa is today, and the citizens have done incredibly well to preserve this history in the numerous monuments and buildings that remain erect.

Prestigious vineyards, renowned hospitality, acclaimed cuisines and restaurants, and exquisite hotels comprise Napa's attractions. It has become a widely successful tourism-based industry, and myriads of visitors each year discover why.

Sawyer Tannery

Much of Napa's prospers stemmed from its tanning industry. The Sawyer Tannery is quaint evidence of this, having been founded in 1869. As the birthplace of "Nappa leather," Sawyer Tannery would quickly escalate to become the largest tannery west of the Mississippi. In the time since its rise, many others would attempt to copy the remarkable workmanship and craft of Nappa leather, but to little avail.

Artesa Winery

Owned by the storied Raventos family of Spain (whose winemaking history extends back to the 16th century), the Artesa Winery now emphasizes production of History Timelinesmall. This composes premium lots from which Napa Valley's best Chardonnay, Pinot Noir, Merlot, and Cabernet Sauvignon are created. The Winery is atop hills with vistas of Napa Valley, San Francisco Bay and its own estate vineyards, which is why it's referred to as the Jewel of Carneros.
