THE CITY

Don-vip

Over the past 200 years, Syracuse has been many things—the nation's top producer of salt, a thriving industrial city, and a major academic and cultural center. One thing it has never been is dull.

Salt production began in the late 1700s and increased drastically with the opening of the Erie Canal in 1825. It waned around the end of the American Civil War and gave way to industrial manufacturing. Syracuse is still known as the "Salt City" for providing most of the salt used in the United States in the 1800s.

Central New York's Native American heritage is evidenced by the names of its towns.

Additionally, Syracuse has attracted immigrants from all over the world, and the tableau of the city is painted with the rich culture of these people that can be seen with a stroll through one of the city's many villages, such as Little Italy or Tipperary Hill. Although history and tradition are important to Syracusans, this is not a city that lives in its past. It has grown into a vibrant academic and cultural center with the continued growth of Syracuse University, a major research university with nationally recognized athletic programs, and Upstate Medical University. Work from local artists is celebrated and can be found in the city's many art galleries as well as in some local shops.

Parents and their children can find exciting activities at the Everson Museum, Rosamond Gifford Zoo, The MOST, and the Erie Canal Museum, along with the Landmark Theatre, Syracuse Stage, and Armory Square with its many fine Restaurants, Taverns, and Nightclubs.

ESSENTIAL INFORMATION

Syracuse Hancock International Airport

Syracuse Hancock International Airport (SYR) is located 4.6 miles (7.4 km) northeast of Syracuse. It is a joint civil-military public airport. In addition to major airlines Air Canada, American Eagle, Delta, JetBlue, United Airlines and USAirways, Syracuse Hancock International Airport is also served by Comair, CommutAir (Continental affiliate), Allegheny, Mesa, Trans States, Cogan Air, Piedmont, Chautauqua, and Shuttle America (USAirways affiliate). Affiliate airlines serving the airport are subject to change.

Syracuse Regional Taxi has an exclusive agreement to provide ground transportation for the airport. Accordingly, they are the only company allowed to operate a dispatch center inside the terminal and state vehicles outside the airport. They provide both taxi and shuttle van services. Other companies are allowed to pick up passengers on a prearranged basis.
