The butterfly-shaped islands of Guadeloupe, a French overseas territory in the Lesser Antilles, are one of the Caribbean's best-kept secrets. Travelers in-the-know have caught on and begun visiting these mesmerizing islands and the city of Pointe-a-Pitre in order to enjoy the fascinating mix of French tradition and Creole culture, the overwhelming natural beauty found in the lush rainforests and awe-inspiring beaches and the relative scarcity of tourists. With a burgeoning hotel infrastructure and an important cruise port welcoming seafarers, there has never been a better time to visit.

THE CITY

KoS / Wikimedia Commons (image cropped)

The French overseas territory of Guadeloupe is composed of a small group of enchanting and fascinating islands in the Caribbean, where French tradition meets Creole culture in surroundings of absolutely stunning natural beauty. The main island, charmingly shaped like a butterfly, is divided into two parts: Basse-Terre, where the Grand Soufrière volcano towers over the Guadeloupe National Park, and Grande-Terre, home to idyllic beaches and the major urban settlement of Pointe-a-Pitre.

With a history dating back to the mid 1600's, Pointe-a-Pitre encompasses the cultural blend that characterizes Guadeloupe, with 19th-century architecture, interesting museums, bustling markets and the sounds, colours and flavours of a vibrant Creole society. The downtown area, just to the south of the airport and right next to the cruise port terminal, is home to Place de la Victoire, the main square and heart of urban life, as well as the city's best shopping in the covered spice market and its surrounding commercial streets. To the south lies the district of Le Gosier, which bubbles with life in the many restaurants, cafes and bars that surround the marina.

Guadeloupe's smaller islands are all easily accessible from Pointe-a-Pitre by air and sea, and are well worth exploring, boasting mesmerizing beauty both in lush tropical landscapes and picture-perfect beaches.

DO & SEE

Capture Light / Shutterstock.com

Pointe-a-Pitre is compact and easily navigable, offering nicely-preserved 19th-century architecture, vibrant marketplaces, excellent museums and the lively Place de la Victoire, the central square around which much of urban life revolves. The city also serves as a great home base for exploring the nearby natural beauty of the islands, with easy access to the imposing volcano La Grande Soufrière, the Guadeloupe National Park on Basse-Terre, and the other idyllic islands that make up Guadeloupe.

Place de la Victoire

Place de la Victoire is the beating heart of life in Pointe-a-Pitre, a picturesque park and plaza lined with palm trees, historic houses and sidewalk cafes on three sides and the clear waters of the harbour on the fourth. The plaza is also the centre of historical and cultural events, hosting festivals, concerts and other events.

Église Saint-Pierre et Saint-Paul

Nicknamed the 'Iron Cathedral' because of the iron girders it has supporting the traditional arches (a structural necessity to protect the building from earthquakes and hurricanes), the quaint Église Saint-Pierre et Saint-Paul is one of the prettiest buildings in the city and well worth checking out.

Address: Rue du Général Ruillier, Pointe-à-Pitre

Aquarium de la Guadeloupe

Aquarium de la Guadeloupe is located in the area of Gosier, a short distance to the south of Pointe-a-Pitre, but the trip is well worth it, as it is often cited as one of France's best aquariums.

It showcases the rich marine life of the area, with more than 60 species of tropical fish, sharks, turtles, and many more.

Terre-de-Bas Island

Located just south of Basse-Terre Island, Terre-de-Bas is one of the smaller islands that make up Guadeloupe, and by far one of the most beautiful. It boasts picturesque fishing villages and beaches, as well as some lovely hiking trails, including one to the towering Grande Montagne.

Address: Terre-de-Bas, Guadeloupe

Terre-de-Haut Island

Terre-de-Bas' eastern counterpart, Terre-de-Haut is arguably more charming and distinctly French than the other island of Les Saintes. The beautiful bay of Bourg des Saintes, the island's main settlement, is bordered by pure white sands, quaint wooden houses and colourful fishing boats, all the while towered over by the volcanic "Sugarloaf" hill.

DINING

OkFoto / Shutterstock.com

Guadeloupean cuisine, like much of the island's culture, is the result of a mix of influences. Creole specialities have strong French characteristics and use local spices and flavours to give dishes their unique character. Seafood features heavily on most menus, but local specialities are diverse, including things like goat and many exotic fruits. Many of the city's best restaurants are located around the Marina at Le Gosier, offering expertly prepared dishes and stunning harbour views.

La Canne à Sucre

La Canne à Sucre enjoys a privileged location on the quay, facing out over the clear water of the bay and the large boats making their way to and from the harbour on the other side. They prepare top-notch Creole dishes using only the freshest ingredients.

BARS & NIGHTLIFE

Rawpixel.com / Shutterstock.com

Guadeloupian nightlife moves to the beats of Biguine, a unique type of music and dance that blends typical French ballroom dancing with infectious African rhythms (although the exact origin of Biguine is disputed, in Guadeloupians will emphatically claim that it is theirs, and NOT Martinique's), while Zouk and jazz are also very popular on the island. The Marina at Le Gosier is the place to be after dark, with tons of bars, lounges, restaurants and cafes offering cold drinks, good vibes and great views of the harbour.

Le Yacht Club

Le Yacht Club is one of the swankiest places in town, a restaurant and jazz bar with plenty of style and an exceptional view of the marina. The menu features seafood, barbecue and Creole specialities, and regular special events are held, including live musical performances and karaoke nights.

SHOPPING

Jakob Fischer / Shutterstock.com

Visitors to Guadeloupe can find many imported French luxury items, including fashion, perfumes, jewellery and delicatessen, like cheese and liquor. But the most rewarding shopping comes from supporting local industry, which offers wonderful handicrafts, rum and typical clothes and accessories, among others. Markets are a particular pleasure, filled as they are with the colours, sounds and aromas of the islands, and the numerous speciality boutiques carry some unique gifts and mementos.

Village Artisanal de la Pointe des Châteaux

The Village Artisanal located on the far east of Guadeloupe, at Pointe des Châteaux (Castle Point) is home to a range of shops and boutiques selling souvenirs, handicrafts and knick-knacks ranging from chic to kitch. Colourful decorations and tasteful local jewellery line the shelves, and some unique items can be found.

ESSENTIAL INFORMATION

Airport

Pointe-à-Pitre International Airport (PTP) is located in Abymes, about 2.5 kilometres north of Pointe-à-Pitre. It is the main hub for Air Caraïbes and Air Antilles Express, handling regular flights to Paris, Miami and Montreal, as well as numerous Caribbean destinations. There are also seasonal flights from

New York, Boston, Frankfurt and Milan.

For transportation to the city, taxis are the most convenient option. Some have metres (make sure they get used) and others charge a flat rate. There are also two car rental agencies at the airport (Sixt and Hertz) and numerous shuttle companies that can be booked in advance. There is no public transportation to or from the airport.

Public Transport

There are two bus stations in Pointe à Pitre. The first is at Bergevin, in the north of the city, which routes to Basse-Terre. It has a ticket office and fixed timetables. The other station, in the southern district of La Darse, has service to destinations on Grande-Terre. Tickets here must be bought on the buses themselves as there is no ticket office. Transport can be slow, so if you're in a hurry it may be best to hire a car or take a taxi (though they can be pricey). There are also regular flights and ferries connecting Pointe-a-Pitre to the other islands of Guadeloupe.

Taxi

Taxis are widely available throughout Pointe-a-Pitre, especially around hotels, as well as at the airport. Many of them are metred, but if not be sure to agree on a price beforehand. Rates tend to be quite expensive on the island, so if you plan on doing a lot of moving around, you may prefer to rent a car.

Port

The most important cruise ship terminal in Guadeloupe is in Pointe-a-Pitre, which was named the "most flexible and reliable Caribbean harbour" in 2014. It is conveniently located right next to the city centre, just a 10-minute taxi ride away from the airport, and has a lounge, bar and arts and crafts bazaar.
