THE CITY

Ekaterina Pokrovsky/Shutterstock.com

Clermont-Ferrand ranks among the oldest cities of France. Renowned for its thermal springs, it acquired great importance under the Roman emperors and became an Episcopal city ruled by its bishop in the Middle-Age. The counts of Auvergne decided to found the city of Montferrand just next to Clermont to counteract the power of the clergy. The two cities were eventually forced to join in 1630 by a royal edict.

Nowadays, the old city centres are still separated. The city has kept this unique historical identity embarking into a huge transformation program that is aimed to shape its new image as a European metropolis.

DO & SEE

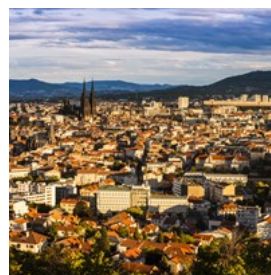

redcarpet/Shutterstock.com

The city's major sights and historical beauties are connected by several walking paths that run through the two ancient town centres. The whole area is home to architectural treasures, museums, castles and some of France's richest Roman heritage.

The region where the city lies is a wonderful site for outdoor activities and adventures, providing travelers with some incomparable walking-trails that twist and turn around the imposing Puy De Dôme volcano.

Old Town Centres (Clermont And Montferrand)

Wandering through the numerous sites and beautiful buildings of the Old Town Centres of Clermont and Montferrand is simply a pleasure. You will find medieval and Romanesque masterpieces, Gothic and Renaissance private mansions, as well as Gothic sanctuaries like the Cathedral. Forty fountains sculpted in petrified lava from volcanoes are located throughout town, offering a pleasant sight for visitors. Montferrand itself is perhaps the most authentic, provided with its exceptional legacy of historical sites, such as place de la Rodade or place Marcel Sembat, the original heart of the city, and the Gothic Church Notre Dame de la Prospérité.
